Everybody knew that this is what it was, but it wasn't written anywhere. Or it wasn't, uh... obviously, like, spoken. We never talked openly about hating Communism, because you never knew who was a spy and who could tell on you to the government, and then your life could be, uh, hell. Or you can disappear. People did disappear. But my father - at home, like I said - he was never afraid to say - at home, I didn't hear him saying outside, but at home - saying that the Communism is the cause of all the suffering and trouble.
